

Ever since visiting job sites with her father as a child, Jessica Dolezal has held a passion for the building world and all it can offer. After working alongside her father throughout her twenties, she expanded her experience with national builders and building material distribution companies before returning to her roots in 2013. Dolezal Creative Design Build, Inc., is the family business, and Jessica is a third-generation builder and President.

Collaboration, respect, integrity, and strength are all factors that are required when creating the best possible finished product, and from the process, camaraderie is born. The company utilizes the honed talents of individuals from the American Society of Interior Designers who work closely with clients from day one. From the initial brainstorm to actual production, every detail is accounted for, down to the last pillow.

“Taking over the family business was quite a change,” said Dolezal. She took over for her father and experienced first-hand what it means to be a woman in charge. “I believe I bring a different perspective to the industry—women think differently than men. I think it creates a great dynamic toward a team effort.”

Home to Dolezal is a safe space to escape to when the world has wound us down. It is a place to exist without judgement and spend time with family and friends. A home is personal, and the thoughtfulness put into a remodel encompasses just that.

In addition to beautiful homes, Dolezal Creative Design Build built Gloria’s Place for the Bridge for Youth, the first of its kind, and was selected to build Storyteller Café, a local nonprofit that supports survivors from human trafficking.

When navigating an essentially male-dominated industry, Dolezal looks to her childhood for motivation. “I learned as a child that ‘can’t’ isn’t a word and to find other solutions to problems to keep things moving,” she said. “We are a ‘yes’ and ‘how’ type of people—we are problem-solvers through and through!”
